Self-Collection Testing, Health Care Services Introduction to Life Cell International

Chennai: LifeCell International, an Indian stem cell banking pioneer and leading biotechnology multinational, has introduced a range of self-collection testing and preservation kits under its reproductive, sexual, women's and baby health services. The testing kits are primarily aimed at encouraging testing for conditions that are often stigmatised and considered taboo. Thus, right from sample collection to obtaining reports, these newly launched testing kits ensure complete privacy and convenience as they can be done entirely from the comfort of one's personal space. LifeCell International Managing Director Mayur Abhaya said "Infertility is a growing concern in India with 10 to 14% of the population affected, according to ISAR, and approximately 2.75 crore couples actively trying to conceive currently suffering from it. However, less than 1% of infertile couples seek treatment, which translates to around 2,75,000 couples. It's unfortunately this low as sexual and reproductive health are taboo topics in India, and any health issues related to them are associated with social stigma. Compounding this problem is the trend among Indian men and women to delay marriage and family planning due to career considerations. At LifeCell International, we are committed to helping them to not just understanding their fertility status via first-to-market healthcare solutions such as SpermScore, OvaScore, and InferGenes, but also help .The Indian Society of Assisted Reproduction President Dr. Nandita Palshetkar, said, "These self-test kits are a significant breakthrough in overcoming social taboos and in addressing the pressing need for accessible and discreet testing options for our men and women. These will ensure early detection of crucial ailments thereby enabling prompt medical intervention and guidance at an early stage. Confidentiality and convenience are paramount compared to traditional testing methods, LifeCell's initiative has the potential to break barriers and revolutionise the way we approach reproductive and sexual health in India."
